The Clarice Smith Performing Arts Center
The University of Maryland launched an effort to become the nation’s first Do Good Campus last fall, with the School of Public Policy establishing the Do Good Institute in September 2016. The Institute serves as a campuswide hub for research, philanthropy, social innovation and nonprofit leadership that aims to reinvent the college experience. Through hands-on learning experiences and a curriculum built on real-world application, the Do Good Institute is inspiring the next generation of do good leaders, spurring social innovation and solutions locally, nationally and globally.

The Do Good Institute is proud to host its annual Do Good Challenge, a spring semester competition that inspires students to take a cause or issue they are passionate about and create the greatest social impact possible. The campuswide challenge encourages students to take fearless ideas that spark innovative solutions to change lives locally and worldwide.

From orientation to graduation, the Do Good Institute will engage the entire student body in initiatives aimed at ensuring every student will be informed and motivated to do good in their communities.

A special thank you to our steadfast sponsors and partners for their continued support of the Do Good Challenge.
